Chain of Custody for timber products

Trees are important in counteracting the effects of global warming as they absorb Carbon Dioxide and produce Oxygen. Trees convert Carbon Dioxide in the air, into carbon and are therefore vital in reducing carbon dioxide levels. To maintain the present number of trees in the World we all need to ensure that the timber we use comes from sustainable well-managed sources; Chain of custody is a system that ensures that this happens. Chain of custody is the unbroken path by which products taken from the forest end up with the consumer, passing through all the stages of manufacturing, transportation and distribution. There are currently two independently accredited chain of custody programmes operating in the Timber Industry. You will often see their symbols on timber products.

FSC (Forest Stewardship Council)

FSC has developed a system of forest certification and product labelling that allows consumers to identify wood and wood based products from well managed forests. The FSC system includes a certified chain of custody that tracks the timber through every stage in the supply chain from the forest to the final user. This is monitored through the invoicing process and the final label on the product has a code that confirms that the label is genuinely FSC.

The FSC is the only scheme endorsed by the major environment charities including WWF, Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace and the Woodland Trust.

PEFC (Programme for the Endorsement of Forest Certification)

The PEFC is committed to promoting sustainable forest management through independent third party forest certification, Forest certified and chain of custody certified managed forests are those whose management implements performance standards based on internationally agreed environmental, social and economic requirements that form the cornerstones of sustainability. Although many forests are sustainably managed, the only way to provide credible proof of this is through independent checking.

www.pefc.co.uk

Kent Blaxill and Co Ltd has successfully achieved chain of custody certification for both FSC and PEFC under an auditing system run by BMTRADA. Our paper work will always show you whether the timber is managed under the FSC or PEFC scheme and will also show our chain of custody certification reference.
